

【About Hong Kong Productivity Council】

Established based on the “Hong Kong Productivity Council Ordinance” enacted in 1967, the Hong Kong Productivity Council (HKPC) is one of Hong Kong’s industrial support organizations. Every year, HKPC and its subsidiaries offer production technology and management consultations, product testing and manpower training services to more than 3,000 companies. HKPC aims to develop value-added products and services to enhance the competitiveness of Hong Kong industry in the international market.

【About the Hong Kong Polytechnic University】

The Hong Kong Polytechnic University is a university with full of vitality and proud history; they have 8 colleges in total, in which the Institute of Enterprise (IfE) will be the main focus of our tour. The Institute, established in 1999, has overseen thousands of projects promoting mutual collaboration between academics and business for their mutual benefit. By harnessing the expertise and resources of the University, IfE provides a wide range of services that assist the industry to develop innovative products and strengthen the competitiveness of enterprises in the global market. Its services include: technology and product development, corporate strategy, business development and management training. At the same time, IfE establishes partnerships with the business sector for transferring knowledge to enterprises. It also takes the responsibility of the University’s intellectual property rights protection by supporting staff in the application for patents of their inventions.
